

TERM: Summer Session I (2025)

COURSE NUMBER & CATEGORY: ENGL 2122: Creativity Through Constraints

COURSE TITLE: Creativity through Constraints

SECTION TIMES/DAYS: TR 12:00 PM -3:45 PM (online)

INSTRUCTOR: Harris

COURSE DESCRIPTION/PRINCIPAL TOPICS:

Creativity Through Constraints invites students to experience ways in which imposing constraints on writing literary texts produces innovative, original, and creative work. We will do close readings of a range of writers characterized by unique experiments with constraint-based production, including members of the Oulipo group (Workshop for Potential Literature) based in Paris. The philosophy of the Oulipo is that constraints liberate the writer's imagination, and induce writers to explore the possibilities of literature in ways they would never expect or accomplish otherwise. Students will study the different kinds of constraints the Oulipo have used and then engage in creating texts under constraints they get to choose. The overarching goal of the course is to induce students to experience literary creativity in both reading and writing texts. You must be prepared to read painstakingly, think analytically, and write attentively in this course. This class is a workshop, defined as a place where an artisan practices applied techniques and produces and delivers particular goods. The encompassing ethos of this class emphasizes experimentation and rigorous play. Challenging oneself to do difficult things, including reading complex texts and writing original works, takes one into new, unexpected territories.

STUDENT LEARNING OUTCOMES:

- Students will learn to attend to the structure and linguistic patterns of literary texts
- Students will experience how constraints enhance creativity in writing texts.
- Students will think about the forms of literary texts in theoretical and practical terms
- Students will analyze literary texts in order to identify their original, singular elements.
- Students will learn to critique peer work effectively
